Every sold car, delivered on time.

One system for the whole store, from the desk to the keys. Every department knows which car is next, and your customer follows along on their phone.

Today: "Where's my car?" calls

Customers follow their own car

A text at every step and a live tracking page. The calls stop.

Today: the car isn't ready at pickup

Every department sees what's next

Service, parts, detail, final check and delivery each see their next cars. Ready means ready.

Today: deals stall and nobody knows

The GM sees every hold-up

Problems first, then the numbers. What's held up, where and why.

Safety and recalls open themselves

WHAT IT SAVES

About $9,600 of work a month

≈217 h

On a busy practice store (22 staff, 141 deals in a month), the customer updates, department hand-offs, status calls and checklist typing Dealivery takes over came to about 217 staff hours, or $7,586 at $35/h, plus about $2,000 in comebacks avoided when 8 safety problems were caught before the customer left. Rule of thumb: about 1.5 staff hours per delivered car. Estimates.
